

The Art of Thinking – Volume 1

- The Fabric and Foundation of Liberation and Creation

By Miles Adams

Index

• Preface	3
• On Awareness.....	5
• On Guardians	14
• On Society.....	20
• On Distractions.....	23
• On Procrastination.....	26
• On Fear.....	29
• On Imagination.....	31
• On The Misery of Success	34
• On Responsibility.....	39
• Closing Thoughts	45

- Preface

This short work of literature was made with the intention of introducing the reader to a hidden truth, buried in plain sight. It is meant to be studied, tested, and implemented. The questions are meant to be answered, the concepts presented are meant to be practiced.

This volume is an overview, a treatise, a preamble for creation and achievement. Within, you will find such truths that have been responsible for your failures as well as your successes. For some, this may be a painful recognition that they have not been in control of their own life. For others, it will be that catalyst for which all their future success can be originated from.

It is your choice whether you choose to accept the information presented, to use it and change, or to brush it off as merely a theory, to go back to your past life, one so blind and entrenched in confusion and persistent frustration. Should you choose to entertain these ideas as truth, test them. Take what is presented and trace the realities of it in your own life. Through this, you will find the ability to create the greatest ideas buried within the deep reservoirs of your mind, the ability to make what was once impossible, possible.

This book is primarily the first section of a larger title called The Liberation of a Lost Life. It is the starting point for which the Next Generation will evolve and progress, for which you can begin to expand your consciousness and become aware of your current reality. You will understand how your current and former self was created, and, by choosing to think and process the information presented, create your life in the vision that you decide.

Within these pages you will find the pathway towards Liberation, the process of Freedom, the introduction to any Creation. There is nothing that you may not have, do, or become with the understanding of this reality. Although at first blush, it may be taken with a heavy hand, a weight of reality that seems too tough to bear, but if you persist, what is to come will be your greatest Liberation, the spark of the fire inside you that is the start of your success, your achievements, your ever-progressing Evolvement.

- On Awareness

When left to study, rather, to truly study without theories or preconceived notions of objectivity, what really changes a person is becoming aware. So many of us live hollow and blind realities that simple principles of success come across as secrets, but in reality, they are part of a whole. These realities are contributing factors, not a defining point that will lead to success, only a fragment to help you understand success.

Awareness as discussed here comes from the standpoint of an objective goal. Without a goal, awareness is absent of true meaning. To be aware of something must mean that the goal leads to somewhere, otherwise, aimless awareness leads nowhere and is subject to failure. To grow, we must have an aim, a goal, otherwise we are defined as being merely ‘enlightened’ or ‘spiritual’, as if we are a being who sees life as a fleeting, meaningless continuum, who seeks a closeness and relation to a God or religion without realizing the Godliness of their individual being and their divine ability of true creation.

-So then, what are we supposed to define ourselves as?

-What is the higher aim we should strive for, that each and every person yearns for?

Most believe there should be a point of ending, one in which we can sit back and be solidified in our accomplishments, that our work and aims are finalized and we live in this mystical, magical place of success.

So few ever reach such a world:

-Why?

We see a select few, they, the celebrities, the Gods of our society, and we yearn for their life with the belief that they possess blessings, divinities that normal people do not possess. We tend to see these celebrities only after they have reached success, but we have created an even worse habit. We are unaware that it is only after they have shed the skin of whom they once were that they are successful. This is why so many successful people find it difficult to explain their successes.

In this sense, the objective is success, whatever that may mean to you. It is unnecessary for you to define your success or even have a specific objective in mind until this has been read through in its entirety at least once. You can be aware of an objective you have in mind, but do not define yourself by that, not yet, at least. You will find yourself changing your habits, your thought structure, and your methodologies through the course of this book. Be open and fluid to change in all areas of your life.

What is curious is how many people become aware, “try” to change, or simply do nothing at all. It is an unfortunate occurrence to become aware only at the point that it becomes too late. This is not just physical, from some health ailment that brings awareness only after the point at which it can be changed - from the most disheartening and vile methods of all, being that of age. No, it is much more if not entirely in the mental realm: People die mentally long before their physical death by choosing to stay unaware.

It is such a sad reality that the elders within the masses do not feel they have lived a complete life, one without regret that is filled with such wholesome meaning and purpose. Many wallow and are quick to preach how when they were younger, if things were different, if they could have lived differently, then it might have been worth it.

-How many people have truly lived and how many were just waiting for death?

To not choose Liberation is to choose death; there should be no gray lines here.

To take the first step into Liberation, we must ask and be able to answer, one question so painfully simple, but potentially even more painful to answer:

-Why?

Question Everything.

From the most blatant vices, to your subtle quirks, find the motivations behind their existence. This will not be easy but will be one of the most important aspects of true growth. Such questions will lead you to realize whether or not you are in control of your own life.

By questioning the larger issues, or if you do not yet see them as issues, the circumstances in your life, you will begin to become aware of what degrades and mires your life and what brings joy, what brings you purpose. This exercise should not be taken lightly or done quickly. It will be of the highest importance for growth now and throughout your existence. Consider:

-Why do you wake up?

A strikingly simple question, yet the answer may not be so simple. The quick answer is to regard the next step in a daily routine of 'work.'

-Why do you go to work?

To make money.

-Why do you want money?

To pay bills.

To buy things.

To provide for my family.

-Why do you have the bills that you do?

-What things are you buying?

-Why do you feel the need to have them?

-What are you providing for your family?

To further such questions, take account of what you do throughout your day:

-How much do you actually 'work'?

-How much time do you spend distracted?

-Why are you so distracted?

-What are you distracting yourself from?

-How much effort, real and purpose driven effort, do you put towards those things that you value in your life?

On the whole, the answers are striking similar. One thing becomes clear when this idea is taken to its fullest extent; the masses are looking to settle. They settle for jobs they despise, so much so that the only time they feel they can live is in those few days away from 'work' that their owners grant them. They allow themselves to be so ruled by a 'boss' that they accept their fate, though they will wreck their lives consistently by not just the acceptance of their fate but by defining their purpose to only ever complaining about it, to such levels that it may be the only conversation they know is to talk about their loathing and overall lack.

Yet they find it so hard to leave, to take it upon themselves to be bold and to speak up, not only for the wrongdoings of their owners, but in speaking up that they have created this situation by not taking responsibility for their actions or lack thereof. Any moments in which they are away from their job, from their place of enslavement, they choose to be distracted, to work more on excuses than their own growth. They decide that distractions and short term entertainments are more important than solutions to their woes. They choose to settle for comfort and general consistency, be it constant mediocrity.

-Why do we cling, clutch, and claw our way to comfort?

We try with such strain to hold on to daily comforts of being normal that the very thought of change seems so drastic and daunting that it becomes overwhelming to do anything but have our actions normalized by our peers.

This can surely be traced back to our evolution as humans, our constant struggle for survival breeds the incessant desire to be comfortable and safe. Time and evolution prevailing, we largely do not have any need for several genetic traits other than in a select few moments of our lives. Our biologic factors do not need to be suppressed, rather, we need to become aware with the goal of moving past what we once were.

The simple question of ‘why do we wake up’ brings to light what our motivations are and why we have become who we are. There is a heavy burden on those that question to such depths, but this is where we find Liberation. Those dark reservoirs of self-analysis and realization are what will get us to the point of growth and success.

Consider the harsh reality that in most of who you are and what you do was so heavily influenced in your younger years that you may still be living that reality instead of a reality of your own creation.

Who you are, good and bad, can be traced to an inherent system designed to replicate fluidity and ease for the greater good of society. To not conform causes such a rift in the movement of the masses that it is quickly shunned, or, if persisted long enough, heralded as Godliness. Be sure in this: The only difference between mediocrity and success is consistency.

Should you choose to live by your own accord, recognize this system and how it has affected you to this point.

-Are you living in a reality based on previous perspective or a reality based on your own creation?

The first twenty years of your life are, essentially, spent getting you caught up to what society has been doing for the last thousand years and how to comport yourself within that society. The methods in which we have advanced as a species, as a society, and as individuals is woefully inadequate. We have struggled, but persisted to reach the point we are in, so entrenched in the falsities that we have been taught through those before us. Two influencers have failed us: Guardians and Society.

- On Guardians

The people that housed you, that fed you, that cleaned you, that cared for you, that provided for you enough to ‘grow’, are the Guardians. It is not just your biological parents, if you had any, but those people who had a close, integral influence in your development.

In terms of genetics, what you take from your parents is only structural, your overall build, your appearance, your general health. What you do not take from your parents and are not born with are the non-structural traits, the habits, quirks, mindset, and particularly important is that you are not born with your parents abilities.

The frail masses have a self-defeating tendency to base the success of individuals on the theory of talent, rather than a learned ability. This should be made vitally clear:

-There Is No Such Thing As Talent.

Talent, in terms of a pre-conceived, genetic trait passed on through DNA is an absolute fabrication. It is a theory, born from the weak and bleak facets of a society that refuses to take responsibility for their own actions. No examples of this truth or any truth will be put forth: You must take the truth presented and test it for yourself. You will never find a case by which to prove that Talent is real.

As you study, look at how pre-dispositioned your subject is to their craft. The earlier you can go back, the better. Take any person that you define as successful in their craft and discover the beautiful, wonderful, awful truth that their success has only ever come from their own accord, not a genetic compensation. Look at their Guardians, their given situation in which they either ran to or ran away from. Look at their mindset towards their craft. What is even more interesting is how this can be done for those you deem as unsuccessful.

What your Guardians provide you with early in your development becomes such a dominant part of who you are. This includes all the teachings verbally and physically, but even more important are the nonverbal and mental cues that are learned.

Children learn far more from what their Guardians do, than will ever be learned when saying it or showing it. As a Guardian, the most important lesson that should be provided is an example of how to live.

Children either learn what to do through actions or they learn what not to do. If you are a Guardian now or when you become one, ask yourself:

-What Am I Providing?

When children are given instead of shown, they do not absorb anything other than a learned behavior of entitlement. So many Guardians who grow up with lack, without any real surplus, forcing them to work and overcome, are not aware that when they provide such surplus to their children that they themselves never had, they are doing their children an extreme developmental disservice.

This is not to say that children should be raised in a constant state of denial, rather, demonstrating through your own actions how joy and success happen, that it will never be obtained through the repetitive cycle of over-supplying children with meaningless entertainment.

-What did your Guardians teach you?

-Did they lead by example and show you how to live a full life?

-Did they tell you to live a full life without showing you, without teaching you because of a lack of awareness?

-Further still, did they never tell you, never show you?

-How often did you see your parents ambitiously working towards a goal with such passion that it led you to recreate it within your own life?

-How many times did you see them entrenched in meaningless entertainment, trying in vain to escape from the reality of their own life?

The answers should be clearly correlated and coordinated with your current reality. Consider what traits you now have, especially in terms of work ethic and mindset, the positive, the negative, the lack of beauty or the beauty of life.

-Were you shown how to live or did you run from the way that your Guardians lived?

These traits become clearer when you look at your work life and your relationships.

-Is the ambition and success within your current career relative to that of your Guardians?

-Did you learn from emulating?

-Did you learn from innovating and doing what they did not?

To be clear, these questions are to be answered within you, with deep, honest thought. There should be no objective other than an awareness of being sympathetic as to why you are the way you are.

-In your relationships, be it friends or dating, why are you doing what you do?

The friends and partners you choose are based on similar profiles learned from your Guardians, whether you learned to act as they do or act as they do not. It is an unfortunate theme to see so many Guardians that were never Liberated, berating their children by teaching them how to have a multitude of poor relationships, with no regard to self worth.

What children need, now more than ever, is to be inspired. They need be able to emulate their Guardians, which they inevitably do anyway, in a method that allows them to grow, not just to be stuck in the entrenched views of their elders. Children one day may be grateful for some unclear 'sacrifices' their Guardians have made by not going after their true ambitions, but ultimately and predominantly they follow what their parents have done. They see what their Guardians do far more than their Guardians say.

-What have your Guardians done for you?

-Did they Inspire you?

-What are you doing for your children?

Are you Inspiring them?

As much blame can be placed on your Guardians, they can blame their Guardians which in turn creates a never-ending cycle of blame and lack of responsibility. With each generation, there is always either a push or a pull; either we, consciously or unconsciously, pull towards them or push away from them.

Our power is not built on the Last Generation, merely influenced. We can learn from their mistakes, and learn just as much from their success. Realize that when we take the traits from the Last Generation, it is based only on their previous perspective. Our growth towards creating the Next Great Generation comes from our ability to recognize, become aware of that perspective, and change ourselves.

- On Society

The effect that societal influences have on us is typically much more superficial and timely; as a society changes, as do you tend to remain favorable and have a place within. The connection with societal pressures can be just as blind and drastic, but also much more difficult to become aware of and overcome. With Guardians, if it is unfavorable, we can move away from such factors once we become aware. Society defines so much of the trends and shallow escapes that we may yearn for. We must become aware of what pressure is felt from the masses.

It is first necessary to become aware of the remarkable distractions that plague a society. The False Gods of celebrities and athletes, the trends set by companies that breed such far reaching potentialities for distraction that is nearly impossible, but also necessary, to ignore them. We only need to be aware that they are there and learn to control ourselves, to become aware of the strong grip they can have, otherwise we run the risk of having it control us.

The aim of a society is to stick together, to act as a cohesive entity, just as a tribe relies on each member to move forward by the trends of the whole. As such, the fear of missing out, of being left behind weighs heavy in every member. There is a constant anxiety about being left behind, not having a place amongst the masses.

-Have you found yourself swayed by the masses, either through ideology of simple trends in entertainment, or by the judgment of standing out?

-Do you feel uncomfortable without your phone?

-Why?

-Do you feel an incessant need to be In The Know, to be up to date on current events, events so meaningless within your own life that it leads to nothing?

-Why?

-Do you feel the need to have the latest products?

-Why?

Society and the yearning for connection is a biological trait, a condition born of necessity for survival. To lose sight and the intricate understanding of how the tribe operates will lead to some form of decay. This is not such a prominent factor in our current reality, but the emphasis of upkeep is still as strong. For so many, they survive only by their relevance to society, by their place amongst friends, and even those many whom they will never know.

Consider how the masses move, how trends thrive and expand, how the individuals idealize. Companies produce and market only to the necessity or value that they can give. Governments are only allowed to take and give back only in accordance to the general tone that is asked from the society.

It is never the fault of a company or even a divisive government that we fall prey to distractions. Both provide only as we ask them to produce. We can lay blame on them, just as with Guardians, but our power will come only as we become aware and take responsibility for it. We must become aware of what happens during these trends and ask ourselves of the necessity or understand its potential ailments and distractions.

- On Distractions

The fear of missing out and being disconnected is conceptually realized in social media. The masses are left numb and blind to reality, entranced in such a vegetative state by the constant affliction of content. It can become such an addiction that it pervades all awareness and permeates into everything we do. Simple tasks cannot be done without checking for new, often regurgitated content causing such a distraction that when the joy of the connection wears off, hours have been wasted with no purpose left but to fall asleep so as to do it over again.

-Have you been so focused on social media that you lose touch with the current reality?

-How often have you done this?

Certainly, these platforms have their place. It is one of the greatest human successes that we can be so connected. Be wary, though, not to become so connected that you are disconnected from reality. Remember that we are the masters of technology; it should never become the master of us. We can use all technology as useful tools, but it should never lead to distraction from our growth and purpose. Become aware and take note of when the feeling of distraction takes you. The power lies in your ability to take responsibility of such feelings and ungrounded requirements.

-Why do you feel the need to be so connected?

-What will happen if you are not so included in the masses?

-Do you have an addiction to distraction?

The base of this distraction is a desire to escape, to evade, to entertain the idea of a different reality. Think about what you are running from, what you are ignoring or avoiding. Realize the truth that the constant need for distraction is symbolic of your current condition.

-What are you evading within your life?

-What are you evading emotionally?

-What are you evading physically?

-What are you evading mentally?

There are two major reasons that define the reasoning behind finding and creating these distractions, the first being escaping a reality from which you are so disconnected, that, in a sense, your distractions become your reality. Your massive discontent with your current situation has become such an overwhelming issue that it has become an addiction to escape. It has become so engrained in who you are that blindness has set in, the awareness has gone entirely, your life is no longer your own, rather, it is now a never-ending search for the next distraction.

-How often do you get distracted?

-How deeply do you become distracted?

-Is it so much that you are living for the distraction, for that next moment when you can escape into the mundane?

-What led you to this point?

Or, is it that you have goals, or at least something you should be doing and the overwhelming anxiety that comes from procrastination is too much to handle, therefore, the distractions become a necessary process of who you are in another attempt to escape responsibility?

Given either case or any variation of the two, we must become aware, we must take control, less we live to die by the distractions.

- On Procrastination

The essence of procrastination is distraction; to fill the void of waiting with mindless entities, be it projected with excuses as some form of necessity. To put off, to wait until some magical “right time,” or “when you are ready,” are the weakest levels of human intelligence, a formless cognitive process that destroys the very fibers of our growth.

-What are you putting off?

-Where would you be in your life if you had taken action?

-Where could you be if you took action now?

To grow, we must recognize and chastise all forms of procrastination. The awareness of waiting creates a force that moves so swiftly through the monotonous multitude of the masses, it is seen as a miracle, a fluke, some form of divine interventionist luck that creates your fortune.

To wait, to delay, to put off must be banished should we choose growth. To take action is to be aware that the more we wait, the further away from success we travel, not only in time, but also in the ability and the desire to do so. The interlude of time between an idea and the action towards it must be immediate, less it be squandered, eventually and inevitably lost to the perils we imagine to justify the waiting.

To those that still entertain the idea that they're waiting until they are ready, even after the completion of this book, recognize the harsh truth that:

-You will never truly be ready to be successful.

To wait until some baseline circumstance appears or until inspiration strikes, recognize the abject failure to which you imprison yourself and the hopelessness in waiting. There will never be a euphoric moment in which the moon and the stars align that gives you some clearly defined path to follow. It is an inconvenient truth that your continual desire for convenience is planted in weakness, grown from society, and blossoms into failure.

Do not stray from this idea: In awareness, there is power, in power there is fright. To be afraid is natural, but we must become so aware of this factor that we vanquish it. We should move with such strength and power, such unflinching ferocity that the moment fear is recognized, it is replaced with purpose.

- On Fear

-Fear is useless.

Fear is a horrific plague, and once it infects, fear destroys our ability for creation, for progress, for happiness. Should we choose not to become aware that fear is such a defining characteristic of weakness, then we are doomed to slowly wither and die, perhaps death comes more quickly than can be recognized, but assuredly just as meaningful in ensuring the meaninglessness of our existence. To choose not to control fear is damning yourself to its control, damning yourself to a treacherous life, a life defined by constant turmoil and regret.

Fear is the most easily defined and definitive characteristic of animal and human evolution. The Fight or Flight response is a biologic design that allows us to survive as a species. However, without awareness, this response will inevitably destroy our species, perhaps not in the physical sense, but certainly on an individual, mental level.

-What do you fear?

-What do you run from, put off, ignore?

-What part of your life is controlled by fear?

Consider your relationships, or lack thereof. Consider projects, ideas, simple thoughts you have had that have been blocked in some way. Consider when and why it was that you decided to give up control and allow fear to control you.

We must recognize that fear is nothing more than our imagination creating scenarios of worry and doubt. Fear is a response to protect us from danger, real or imagined. To grow, we must bring the awareness that allows us to recognize fear when it happens so we may learn and control, and dictate who we are. Otherwise, fear will protect us from our joy, our goals, and our purpose.

- On Imagination

The greatest and most terrifying evolutionary construct, perhaps the only one of real value that persists is Imagination. Without Imagination, humans would cease to exist, as we have few real survival skills left, which is why our cognitive processing and Imagination came about. To learn what your Imagination is doing to you, but also what it can do for you, is of the highest importance in becoming aware and the process through which true growth happens.

Just as Imagination can and will be the supreme tool for the growth of mankind, so it can also be the greatest downfall. What builds and creates just as easily destroys and erases. What enables our civilization to grow is also that which holds it back.

When we use our Imagination, especially in terms of fear, it is almost always a protectionist response to an uncomfortable situation.

-How are you using your imagination?

-When a situation arises that could be unfavorable, are you filled with anxiety and doubt of some bad premonition?

-How many times have you held yourself back because of Fear?

-How many times in a day, a year, a life?

-Where could you be if you learned to control yourself?

Life and death, success and failure emerge from the same place, the only difference being our control of it, our awareness of it. Become at once aware when it takes over, when the buzz of worry and doubt begin, when it becomes such a destructive force that you become the weakest version of yourself.

-What are you protecting yourself from?

-What would happen if you were courageous and did that which you fear most?

Should we advance as a society, we choose to govern ourselves, rather than be governed by fear. Imagine what you would do, what you would have done, where you would be if you did not let fear define you and bind you. Imagine how different your life would be in every circumstance if you were led by your creative, courageous being, not the cowardly, scared person as you exist today. Imagine living as if you knew you would succeed, that those thoughts of fear and doubt and lack never came about. Let thoughts of power, of freedom, of creativity carry you always.

Should we choose to exist as more than our current state, we must become aware that our Imagination can be a boundary by which we define ourselves. It is the cold, iron bars that confine us to be only what we know, to see only that which is 'realistic' within our current state. Imagination is the key to our failures, as such, it is also the key to any and all success, allowing us to open the doors to any ideas we should create and seek to obtain.

Within our Imagination we live just as we die, it is dependent only upon how we choose to structure and create our thoughts. It should be made clear the blunt contrast that we create our failures and our success, but just as assuredly as we run from failure, we run from success.

- On The Misery of Success

There is a wild misconception that has a tendency to destroy the virtues, principles, and ambition of those seeking success; that success leads to happiness. Those that lack awareness have a false understanding that success will lead to some sort of satisfaction and meaning in their lives. While success can lead to a sense of fulfillment, it is only after the truth of themselves is absolute. If ‘success’ is reached before the attainment of a sense or understanding of what fulfillment means to them, then the notion of success should be profoundly in question.

Many have been blinded by the allure of success, living in the binding void of material possessions and subjective situations that are built on the weak structure of hope, that fall by the mighty force of reality. Material possessions, subjective situations are constructed around the anticipation of some feeling it might bring you. These should be recognized and cast out of your life indefinitely, less you are lead astray by false reality, only to be awakened once the darkness of hope wears off.

The reality of success does not come from some divinity of a granted place of privilege, or that it is 'given' in any way. When you look at cases of those who have achieved some amount of success through a perceived lack of work, more or less a mere happen-stance, question what their success really is; research and recognize why it happens and, more importantly, change your mind set on how you view the success of others. Envy, that loathing contempt for those who have more than you, is of the weakest order and should be banished entirely from your character. Become aware that such envy comes from the weaker and unaware side of who you are.

When you study successful individuals, recognize what actually went into their 'success,' the time, the pain, the work that it took to get there. Certainly, those procedures should be analyzed and held in the same high regard as the 'success' itself. What must take hold in you is the reality that these people, to become successful, took responsibility for their own lives. To blame others, to allow yourself to be held back through the weakness of envy, ensures your downfall from whatever position you seek.

The Misery of Success is the reality that the days of procrastination are past. Gone will be the turmoil of trying in vain to remain relevant within a society that does not care. Gone are the days in which you get to be normal.

To think that at the end of this you can remain who you are now is to proclaim that you are going to fail. Countless others have flirted with success, or looked lustfully at success only to fail in the harsh reality that true Liberation should be so unlike what you are doing now that, and this is something to remember, your friends, your family may recognize you, but they will not know you if you choose to be successful.

Many feel compelled once they become aware and put directed effort into a given goal to try and tell others about what they are doing. This should be cast aside and discarded, though it may be difficult at first blush. Do not worry about trying to explain the reasons behind your goals. Recognize that people have perceptions based on their own experiences; it will be unnecessary and potentially destructive to your progress to try to explain your newfound awareness and resulting actions. There is no real benefit to explain yourself as people will typically cast doubt and dispersions based on their currently reality, especially if your goals are big enough. Unless you have become Liberated, you run the risk of falling into your past self and continuing to worry and doubt the goal or even the necessity for change. Show them your beliefs through actions, rather than try to reason with them.

-What benefit can come from explaining yourself to others?

Your friends and family care about you in so much as you have an impact on them. Especially in terms of finances, good or bad they only give attention to how much you will affect them. To learn this reality, to accept the Misery of Success is a part of Liberation. To understand it will allow you to reach that next level, without this awareness it can only hold you back.

The Misery of Success is that only you can hold you back. By refusing to take responsibility, to remain unaware can keep you from success. Such responsibility is the defining characteristic in the regression and stagnation in our Society, but also the true essence of power; the truest sense of growth and greatness.

- On Responsibility

All of what you have learned thus far leads to two points:

- Your life may not be your own, but
- Your life is now your responsibility.

You can blame your issues and lack on your Guardians, on Society, on the lack of awareness, but where you go from here is entirely on you, on your decision to acknowledge what is presented.

Responsibility is simply a choice, the culmination of such choices creating your character and ultimately deciding the boundaries by which you will live your life. Consider:

- What are you responsible for in your life?
- What responsibilities are you avoiding?
- What aspects of your life have you made excuses for, that you should be taking responsibility for?

Responsibility is the greatest Liberation you can find because Responsibility allows the most growth. To grow without taking responsibility for success or failure is to be confined to normality, to accept your situation as a random series of events that may or may not be in your favor or control. Once we cease the weakness that persists and take account for our actions, our world becomes fluid and malleable. We can create instead of accepting the mediocrity that surrounds us, affects us.

Becoming aware is to imply the necessity for Responsibility. To be aware without taking the corresponding actions to change results in our inevitable demise. Those that choose to grow must accept the reality that awareness coincides with the responsibility being taken, and accepted, to correct, to change, to grow. Those that choose to become aware and do nothing choose their end state and death; their existence being more meaningless than when they were unaware. Before their potential Liberation through awareness, they were blind, but did not know otherwise.

What must be recognized regarding Responsibility is that now, after determining the realities of your situation, presented before you with the opportunity to Liberate a lost, trivial and meaningless life, where you go and what you do can only ever be your fault. There is no turning back. You can accept to be blindness or orient your fate towards Liberation and growth. Spiritual blindness is easy. Responsibility is liberating.

-How many people have you seen choosing to live a blind existence?

Responsibility is difficult, but only in terms of constant vigilance and the acceptance that with such change and Liberation comes the honest assessment of where you are, who you are, and where you could be, who you could be. It is painful only in the sense that you must leave where you are currently and who you have been. These ideas are simple and should be understood when given proper introspection, but they are not always easy to accept.

-Who could you be if you took full Responsibility for your life?

-Where could you be if you took Responsibility for your life?

-Would you already be successful if you took full Responsibility for your life?

From here, the only answer is that we must grow, we must accept the inevitabilities of change. We must accept Responsibility for what is our current reality, and what our reality can be once Liberated. Consider:

-Is your current reality worth staying in and if so,

-What part of who you are now do you cling to and feel is necessary to keep?

Such a question should be answered fully, not only by those who feel compelled to live blindly, but also by those that choose to change.

There will be moments in which even those who seek true growth will question if a part of them should be kept. Ask yourself:

-Is this piece of your current self worth clinging to?

-Will you still feel this way if you were as successful as you could be?

This should not be used to chastise the longing for current niceties and inconsequential comforts unless it is needed in some extreme cases.

Rather, become aware of why you still cling to such areas of your current reality, be it friends and family, conditions and circumstances, ephemeral desires that do not express your growth. We must take Responsibility for the longings of our current reality and recognize not just the ‘whys’ and the ‘hows’ now as we exist, but the ‘whys’ and ‘hows’ of our own creation as we should want and choose to exist.

For those who lay claim to oppression and victimhood, for you who feel at such drastic odds with your surroundings that no matter what you do and the effort you give that you will be oppressed is to imprint your fate to be that of the victim. If you should choose to break the shackles to be what and whom you choose, take responsibility and consider this truth: If you were to take the oppressors away, you would still find a path to remain a victim. Those that whine and grovel about present conditions will ever remain in such a state. Should you choose to be free, break free with such boundless energy and greatness that you scoff at those whom you once thought kept you down.

To continue from here is to accept Responsibility, to understand the magnitude of what lies before you. It is to accept your yearning for Liberation as a human condition, one that has been stifled and muddled through the treachery of time, but can still be sought and found. The great mission of man will forever be to seek, to find, to grow, to create.

As you stand on the precipice of Liberation, recognize where you are and the absolute necessity for which you must change and be free.

Declare that no longer will you live in the shadows, in the dark and the blind, trying in vain to remain normal, to be understood and accepted.

Affirm that through this Liberation will come the greatest truths, the most vivid and real beauty that the world has to offer and the beauty that has yet to even be created: That your life is your own and will now be under your control through awareness and the God-like power that is Responsibility.

- Closing Thoughts

To become Liberated is to Think. To grow is to Think. To become successful is to Think. Thinking is the lost art of man and by the teachings of this work, of Wolf Empire, that will change. Where you can go from here is without limits. Choosing to direct your thought will allow you to be, have, and do whatever you choose. This Liberation must come first, this recognition of the lack of thought that has potentially plagued your life. Through understanding The Art of Thinking you will build the very fabric and foundation for which all of your future endeavors will be created. To take the time and thought that is necessary to understand how everything in your life has been influenced and shaped by another, consequently, will allow you to understand that you actually created it: That you have, consciously or unconsciously, been in control of your life, you have simply thus far been unaware of it. Revel in this awareness and take responsibility of it. Choose to direct your thought, choose to create, choose to live your life.

If you wish to learn more, to understand more, to find the exact process and formula for which creation happens, contact Wolf Empire. We offer Coaching, Seminars, Online Courses, Literature, Articles, and Daily Posts.

Email: wolfempireinfo@gmail.com

Website: www.wolfempire.org

Instagram: @WolfEmpire_tlp